Tax wealth now - share the burden. We need solidarity from the wealthy

Solidarity is crucial at this time of deep crisis, especially the solidarity of those who have the most in our society. No one is unaffected by the crisis but the burden on those living on low incomes and those coping with high levels of personal/ household debt is much greater than for others.

Public services are being cut and for many this means not having adequate access to health care and essential social protection. cuts to education are jeopardizing our children's futures.

We need solidarity from the wealthy because they can afford to pay without affecting their well-being and without damaging the economy. the low-paid spend most of their income so cutting and taxing this income will further reduce consumption. cutting public services greatly reduces the capacity of people to cope with the crisis and to have an acceptable minimal quality of life.
